

Florence Simmons is a pastor's wife, a mother of three married daughters, a Bible teacher, a speaker, and an author. She has been instrumental in training women in leadership. As a pastor's wife in ministry with her husband, she observed the many right steps and vital wisdom needed for individuals to develop a firm foundation in Christ.

She was formerly a state Assistant Women's Ministry Director and Coordinator of a girl's program for a Protestant denomination in North Dakota. This gave her opportunity to create and share ideas, information, and instructions for young girls and guide leaders in several areas of ministry.

She began her career in writing with devotionals, including Take the Right Steps, 56 short writings through Romans and Galatians, and It's Just Common Sense, 60 short writings from Proverbs. God also impressed on her heart the need to write and self-publish several gospel tracts.

Her eBook and CD, Kid Help, Parents Taking Control, was written to guide and train parents of young children in implementing godly disciplines in their children's lives. This valuable training produces children who become responsible adults who make correct choices and are beneficial to society.

She and her husband David are presently semi-retired after 20 years in North Dakota and a total of 40 years of full-time ministry.